Join us for a tour of Google's development at King's Cross hosted by Lend Lease.

More than 4,500 employees of Google are expected to work at the King's Cross site which has been designed by Heatherwick Studio and Bjarke Ingels' practice. BDP is executive architect on the scheme. The 11-storey building's width varies from 60m to the north to just 20m to the south over its 330m length. The building will run alongside the railway lines into and out of King's Cross station. Some of the cores are already up to the roof structure, which will house planting, trees, amenity space, a multi-use games area and 25m pool. Places are limited.
